Several articles in this issue discuss the academic programs offered through the Engineering and Applied Science Programs for Professionals of the Whiting School of Engineering. As depicted above, a variety of methods are employed to facilitate learning, including lectures, computer laboratory assignments, and team projects. In addition to offering courses in a traditional classroom setting, other courses and entire degree programs are now being introduced in a fully online format, thus extending the reach of the Whiting School beyond the Baltimore/Washington region. (Collage designed by Kenneth R. Moscati; photography by Edward G. Whitman.)